

Professional Bookkeeping

INDUSTRY FACTS

What do professional bookkeepers do?

Bookkeepers crunch a lot of numbers. But more specifically, they prepare invoices, manage payroll, track debits and credits, and manage ledgers. It's a fun gig. One that requires exceptional attention to detail, a positive attitude, and a fondness for basic mathematics. Here's what a typical day or week might look like:

- Using bookkeeping software, spreadsheets, and databases
- Entering financial transactions into the appropriate computer software
- Receiving and recording cash, checks, and vouchers
- Putting costs (debits) and income (credits) into the software, assigning each to an appropriate account
- Producing reports, such as balance sheets (costs compared with income), income statements, and totals by account

- Checking for accuracy in figures, postings, and reports
- Reconciling or noting and reporting any differences found in the records

Where do they work?

Most certified bookkeepers work in office settings. They get to know their client's financial records inside and out, and work with like-minded accountants and clerks from other departments. Generally, they work full-time, but sometimes they put in a few extra hours at the end of the fiscal year or during tax season.

How much do they earn?

The salary for this role varies based on facility, location, and experience, but the national average annual income is $42,410.
